Ready, But Storm Moving In Nation's First Baby Moon Expected To Be Launched Today

Navy Vanguard

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (P) -Last minute complications-of a routine nature-delayed this nation's first satellite launching attempt today and bad weather could further upset the timetable. A storm front, expected to be of only short duration, was moving in on the Cape Canaveral launching site this morning with brisk winds.

The Navy's Vanguard launching team, minutely check-listing every function of the missile that will carry America's baby moon into space, expected to be ready for touching of the carrier around 3 p. m. c. s. t. By that time, however, a storm with winds up to 25 miles an hour was expected to be whipping the area. The front was expected to pass within an hour or so, leaving the weather suitable for a launch-It was emphasized here and in Washington that no other missilefiring schedules had interfered with the firing of the Vanguard, which had top priority.

Herschel Schooley, Defense Department public information chief, said "it is perfectly obvious they are getting a lot of variables" in putting the Vanguard through its pre-flight test and "they have to doctor the times as they go

All troubles found in the intricate mechanism were apparently of a minor nature that needed only adjustments to prepare the missile for a perfect flight.

Winds rose to 18 miles an hour at the missile launching site this morning and visibility was expected to be near zero by the scheduled 3 p. m. launching time. An 11-hour countdown that must precede the launching began at 4 a. m. During the countdown period every member of the launching team rehearses his assignments until all are letter perfect when the bir shoot is ready to go. The Defense Department in Washington said it would have a statement two hours after the launching, indicating it would take that long to confirm whether an orbit had been achieved. Calm Necessary

The Vanguard, a skinny threestage rocket 72 feet long and only 45 inches in diameter at its base, could not be safely launched in wind higher than 20 knots. A gusty front was forecast for late today, coming in from the Atlantic against bleak Cape Canaveral with its forest of missile towers.

So long as the towers, which are mazes of scaffolding on rails torped by gantry cranes, surround the missile they are safe from the elements. But they must be hauled away before the big rockets are fueled and fired.

Thinking It Over

By Robert L. Dieffenbacher, D.D. (Written for NEA Service)

Commercial airlines are responsible for the lives of thousands on every day of flight. Precautions must be taken to allow for many unforeseen emergencies. With air traffic as heavy as it is, planes cannot come into many airports immediately after arriving above their destinations. Planes must carry a goodly supply of extra fuel in order to stay in the air for their turn to land

Even with this precaution, there are times when planes must land ahead of turn because they do not have enough fuel to remain too ong in the approach pattern. Ground crews must be alert to care for forced or emergency landings in the midst of heavy traffic. Everything is done to protect the lives of all passengers who fly.

Many individuals are less careful as they pilot their lives and souls through the maze of daily living. Would that we might learn to be aware of hazards to our spiritual well-being as are the airlines able to protect our physical well

GENERAL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF ILLINOIS A Member of One of the Great Communications Systems Serving America

Home 'Trade-ins' New Development In Building Industry

By United Press Trade-ins of "used" houses on brand new models is one of the most striking new developments in the American real estate mar-

The system works much like trade-ins of used cars. The house builder takes the old homestead in partial payment on the newand usually gives a credit well above that the homeowner could get in cash in the open market.

Then the builder must dispose of the old house, perhaps at a loss but not enough to eliminate his overall profit. Columbus, Ohio, reports as much as one-sixth of its sales of new homes now done through trade-ins. Dallas also reports the practice growing swiftly. It is a manifestation, for one thing, of the increasing difficulty during the past year of getting mortgage money from banks and other loan outfits. That situation seems to be easing now, just as real estate people in many sections of the United States were becoming concerned about a serious slump.

A 15-city survey showed these general developments during 1957: 1. Houses 20 years old or more took a slump in sale price in the majority of areas. 2. Sale price of homes around 5 years old held their own.

3. The new house picture was spotty, up in some places and down in others with shortage of mortgage money the main reason for slow sales.

4. Interest on mortgages rose as high as 6 per cent compared with an average of 4 1-2 per cent a few years ago.

Group Opposes Cutting Funds for Water Programs

WASHINGTON P-The National Rivers and Harbors Congress told Vice President Richard M. Nixon today it opposed cutting funds for water development programs to provide more money for the defense program.

In a letter to Nixon, the congress said, "The press has been carry. ing stories that public works will be 'the No. 1 target' for budget cutting in the current effort to find funds for the new science and missile program.'

The congress said it feels that "the United States did not lag behind Russia in launching missiles and satellites because it was appropriating funds for a reasonable program of water resources devel-

"We also feel that we shall not hasten the launching of American Sputniks and missiles by abruptly halting or crippling our public

The congress said that "if additional appropriations for the mili tary establishment are determined to be necessary, these may be made available by economies in less essential areas of the budget
